

CodeTimeline: Storytelling with Versioning Data

The background of the slide is an abstract, colorful pattern. It features several horizontal lines in shades of blue, green, and red. Scattered across these lines are numerous small, semi-transparent bubbles or circles in various colors, including red, green, blue, and yellow. The overall effect is a complex, layered visual that suggests data flow or a timeline.

How the rumour unfolded

Only 10 minutes later, at 9:42pm, @UniqueUsernameN claims that the picture is a fake, saying the picture is in fact of tanks assembling in Egypt. Others make similar claims, @northbriton45 chipping in that, if the army had been deployed, Bank would be a "tactically flawed place to start".

This picture of army assembling in Bank is FAKE, it's a picture of Egypt >

Barry Schwartz on our loss of wisdom

931,235

Uploaded by TEDtalksDirector on Jan 16, 2007

<http://www.ted.com> Psychologist Barry Schwartz takes aim at a central tenet of western societies: freedom of choice. In Schwartz's estimation, choice has made us not freer but more paralyzed, not happier but more dissatisfied.

Problem: Knowledge about Software Systems typically not documented.

Solution: use Storytelling to entice team members to share memories about a system's past.
